2018 APPAM International Conference
July 19 - 20
Mexico City
Dear Fellow Attendees and Participants:

This is the first time that APPAM has ever held either of its major conferences outside of the USA or Europe, so we are especially excited that Mexico should be the venue for the 2018 International Conference, offering members the opportunity to extend their reach South, and to engage with policy makers and scholars across the many vibrant and strong public policy programs that exist today in Mexico and Latin America. We are delighted to receive a similar number of panel and individual proposals as for the last two conferences in London and Brussels, and that just over 20 per cent came from the region.

Our 2018 conference theme Public Policy for Sustainable Metropolitan Development is timely, coming some 18 months after the 2016 bi-decennial UN-Habitat III conference in Quito and the adoption of the “New Urban Agenda” and United Nations’ 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs 2015-30). The New Urban Agenda presents a paradigm shift based on the science of cities and lays out standards and principles for the planning, construction, development, management, and improvement of urban areas along its five main pillars of implementation: national urban policies, urban legislation and regulations, urban planning and design, local economy and municipal finance, and program implementation and evaluation. Both the “umbrella” conference theme, and the venue of Mexico City itself, offer an excellent opportunity to explore the early implementation of the New Urban Agenda through the wide range of session papers, posters, and plenary discussion selected for inclusion in this year’s program.

The conference opens July 19th with a plenary lecture by ITAM professor Dr. Juan Carlos Belausteguigüitia-Rius “Environmental Challenges and Sustainability of Large Metro Areas,” and closes on the 20th with a plenary panel discussion “Metropolitan Sustainability and Mayoral Challenges for Large Multi-Jurisdictional Cities” featuring several current and former metropolitan mayors from Mexico and the USA.

As you open this program, you will know that July is an exciting moment politically to be in Mexico, given the July 1st elections for a new President and Congress, and for some 2818 local authorities across 30 of the 32 states. These elections are particularly significant since, for the first time, they will allow for direct reelection of members of the Chamber of Deputies, the Senate and some mayors (including Mayor María Eugenia Campos from Chihuahua who appears on the Friday mayors’ plenary panel), a reform that promises to dramatically change the dynamics of politics and governance in the country. Therefore, on Thursday 19th we are pleased to offer a third plenary: “Presidential Election Results: The Implications of the July 1 Elections for the Public Policy Agenda, Directions, and Implementation” where panelists will discuss what these elections may mean for governance and policy change in Mexico, as well as the likely impact upon international relations, especially with the USA.

We would like to offer our sincere thanks to the Program and Conference Committee especially for their effort in promoting the conference to colleagues throughout Latin America, and for their careful review of proposals. We are also grateful to the APPAM Council for giving us the opportunity to host the conference in Mexico, and offer a deep round of thanks and appreciation to the Tara Sheenan, APPAM’s Executive Director, and to Tristanne Staudt and Samantha Oliver, APPAM’s Education and Conferences Director and Meetings and Conferences Manager, respectively. In addition, ITAM warmly acknowledges a grant from Mexico’s Consejo Nacional de Ciencia y Tecnología (CONACYT) primarily to support Mexico’s participation in the Summer Conference. We hope that you will find the conference stimulating and engaging professionally, and that those of you coming from abroad will have an exhilarating visit to Mexico and to Mexico City. Enjoy!

Bienvenidos

<td>These four hotels will have limited shuttle service on both Thursday and Friday of the conference. Depending on demand and availability, the conference shuttle will run twice in the morning, once midday, and twice in the late afternoon. These shuttles will be on a first come, first served basis and the shuttles will not make special trips. If alternate transportation is needed, please use a taxi or download and utilize the Uber mobile phone app (you will need to set up an international phone plan before your trip).</td>

<td>Taxis are relatively low cost in Mexico City, but it is suggested that conference participants either call for one at the hotel or from a fixed taxi rank (rather than hail a taxi on the street). This ensures that the ride is logged. Uber is also widely available across the city. Private hotel taxis usually do not run on a meter, so it is best to check the likely fare at the outset.</td>

Registration

Thursday, July 19
8:15 am – 9:15 am

Friday, July 20
8:15 am – 9:15 am

Location:
Building 4, Auditorium Foyer

Please wear your conference badge at all times. A badge is required to enter all sessions, receptions, and other conference activities. Networking is much easier when your name is on display! You can pick up your badge when you check in at registration.

Up-to-date session information is available in the preliminary program at APPAM.org.

Poster Sessions

Thursday, July 19
6:30 am – 8:00 pm

Location:
Building 4, Auditorium Foyer

The poster session will be held in the Building 4, Auditorium Foyer during the Welcome Reception. A poster session consists of authors presenting their research in poster format, reporting on key aspects of their paper (methods, results, discussion, and policy or management implications) and answering questions. All attendees are invited to enjoy cocktails and hors d’oeuvres while enjoying the research of their peers.

What's Around?

Once #APPAM18INTL has wrapped up, there is still plenty of fun to be had in Mexico City! Here is a list of recommended sites nearby.

Nearby Attractions

Chapultepec Castle
This 18th-century palace, known for its impressive gardens, served as the home of the Mexican President until 1939 and now houses the famous Museo Nacional de Historia. Make this a stop if you visit the nearby Museo Nacional de Antropología.

On top of Chapultepec Hill, Mexico City 11100, Mexico

Museo Nacional de Antropología
Considered one of the world’s most comprehensive natural history museums, this famous institution houses four square kilometers of exhibits in 23 exhibition halls. Though a bit farther from ITAM, this highly-rated museum is worth the trip.

Avenida Paseo de la Reforma, Chapultepec Polanco, Mexico City 11560, Mexico

Museo Universitario de Arte Contemporaneo
Housed at the National University of Mexico, this modern art museum is built on volcanic rock formations.

Centro Cultural Universitario
Avenida Insurgentes sur 3000, Mexico City 04530, Mexico

Parque Nacional Desierto de los Leones
This national park is a large pine forest with a 17th-century Carmelite convent located south of Mexico City.

Cambio al Desierto de los Leones, Mexico City 03310, Mexico

San Angel Neighborhood

The San Angel neighborhood is known for its narrow cobblestone streets and is an oasis in otherwise bustling Mexico City. Attractions include a Saturday market, shopping, and restaurants. Explore these locations while in the neighborhood:

Museo Estudio Diego Rivera y Frida Kahlo
Located in one of Rivera’s former studios, this museum has a small collection of his paintings.

Av. Altavista, Diego Rivera, Colonia San Angel Inn, Mexico City 01090, Mexico

Plaza San Jacinto
The Plaza marks the heart of San Ángel. The square is home to the Bazaar Sábado, excellent restaurants and many beautiful and historical buildings.

Paper Listings

Please note that the listing of papers for panels may not represent the order in which they will be presented. The order of presentation is determined by the presenters in coordination with the session chair. The paper authors are listed in the order submitted and the order does not necessarily indicate who will be presenting each paper.

APPAM set up a searchable database of paper abstracts in the digital preliminary program. When provided by the author(s), full papers have replaced abstracts.

The Journal of Policy Analysis (JPAM), APPAM’s premier research journal, is interested in submissions of papers presented at this conference for publication. More information on the submission process can be found on APPAM.org/JPAM.

Roundtable

Housing As a Platform for Opportunity (SUMD)

Location: ITAM, Building 3, Sala de Conferencias
Moderator: Sherri R. Greenberg, University of Texas, Austin
Speakers: Awais Azhar, Kristie Chin, University of Texas, Austin; Catherine Crago, Housing Authority of the City of Austin

Description:
Affordable and stable housing can play a key role in facilitating social and economic mobility by providing increased connections to digital inclusion, education, health and transportation. Access to affordable housing in high-opportunity areas can improve health outcomes, provide access to better economic opportunities and jobs, and enhance educational performance. In metropolitan areas, including the urban core, suburbs and peripheral rural areas, we must understand how these links to housing can be strengthened to create equitable access to an improved quality of life and opportunities for all. Through an interdisciplinary research project, we have explored the relationships between the place based grounding of housing affordability and access to opportunity. We have conducted focus groups with Austin, Texas, residents across a range of incomes focused on 30% to 120% of median family income, and we have interviewed various stakeholders, from public officials, to housing counselors and community leaders. Additionally, we have reviewed research and case studies from the United States and abroad, and we have analyzed local housing data. We will discuss broadly applicable findings such as: 1) transportation as a key driver to connect residents' affordable housing to health in urban, suburban and peripheral rural areas; 2) misconceptions regarding true digital inclusion and the measures to counter this; and 3) best practices for jurisdictions to improve access to safe and stable housing. We will discuss our conclusions and recommendations regarding the links between housing affordability and digital inclusion, education, health and transportation to afford people ladders of opportunity.
Roundtable
Measuring Municipal Governance Strengthening: Empowering Government Officials to Measure and Track Their Own Administrative Reform (SGVT)
Location: ITAM, Building 3, Room 213
Moderator: Sarah Henshaw, Global Communities
Speakers: Barry Reed, Lana Abu-Hijleh, Yunus Abdulai, Ricardo Dominguez, Global Communities
Description:
Local governance strengthening programs often use an index in monitoring and evaluation to measure impact, but once the program ends, there is no way for local governments to continue that measurement and engage in self-reflection. Global Communities has turned its index into a tool that local government officials can use to rate themselves.

In Colombia, Ghana, Palestine, and Ukraine, Global Communities has customized its Municipal Capacity Index to measure important aspects of good governance in that country. This often focuses in on the topics of leadership or planning, management or administration, service delivery, resource management, financial management, and public or citizen participation.

In Colombia, the MCI measures 147 indicators across those issues on which the national government rates municipal performance and determines eligibility for funding. In Ghana, an interactive assessment tool enables partner Metropolitan, Municipal and District Assemblies develop action plans for institutional strengthening, especially public financial management. In the West Bank, Global Communities developed the MCI with local governments, providing a participatory scoring tool across nine core competencies. In Ukraine, Global Communities is working hand in hand with local governments to apply the Index and develop action plans for institutional strengthening in a participatory way. Mayors and local government staff use the PMCI to set administrative reform priorities to reach the characteristics of a “model community” in Ukraine. It therefore becomes not only a program data collection tool, but also a participatory tool that local government officials can use to rate themselves and develop strategies for improvement.

Roundtable
Securing Urban Viability through Nature: The Water Forest of Mexico City (ENV)
Location: ITAM, Building 3, Room 211
Moderator: Pedro Moctezuma Barragán, Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana; Centli: Centro para la Sustentabilidad Incalli Ixcahuicopa
Speakers: Jürgen Hoth, Conservation International Mexico; Alma Concepción Chávez Mejía, The Institute of Engineering at UNAM; Mario López Pérez, Mexican Institute of Water Technology
Description:
Metropolitan development relies on ecosystem services that provide urban residents with clean air, pure water and fresh food. To help safeguard water in the face of climate change and urbanization, policy-makers and citizens must value the importance of nature for urban viability.

This roundtable brings together scientific, civil society and governmental understanding to discuss the role of urban policy in protecting the Water Forest that provides water to 23 million people. Protecting the watersheds, aquifers, rivers and wetlands in and around Mexico City are key to providing the city with the water it needs, empowering indigenous and marginalized rural communities, and helping urban and rural Mexico unite for sustainable growth.

Water is considered an issue of national security for Mexico, with water shortage in the capital only expected to increase. The aquifers that provide 70% of the water used are already overexploited, and the unrelenting loss of forests and native grasslands is increasingly degrading watersheds and diminishing aquifer recharge, the last remaining rivers are heavily contaminated and biodiverse wetlands are being drained.

Community-based projects, city-wide infrastructure, policy-oriented research and coordinating of effective management of natural areas are but a few of the actions needed to protect and maintain water access. The panelists will share their diverse perspectives of the water crisis in Mexico City as a case study relevant to other global megacities. Insights for effective collaboration between urban, rural and natural stakeholders in the Water Forest will be presented together with suggestions for mobilizing urban policy for improved sustainability.

Description:

In 1950, fewer than one-third of the world’s people lived in cities. By 2050, urban areas will be home to some two-thirds of Earth’s human population. This scale and pace of urbanization has never been seen in human history and requires a new type of science that transcends traditional disciplines and that intentionally links from intra-urban to urban-regional to global scales. No single discipline, from urban planning to public policy to engineering has the scope to address this challenge. Scientists need new data, methods and theories to assess the interactions among people, policy, infrastructure, technologies, governance institutions, and natural systems to understand urban to global system functions and change.

Responding to this landscape, the Advisory Committee on Environmental Research and Education to the US National Science Foundation (NSF) has released a report articulating a long term research agenda for the next generation of sustainable urban systems research. The report seeks to provide a long term vision to guide NSF and other funding agencies as they invest in new science and science-to-action partnerships moving from an exclusive focus on cities to a focus on sustainable urban systems. The roundtable will engage urban practitioners and the APPAM community to react to this vision. How should the academic community think about teaching, research, inter-disciplinarity, and knowledge co-production to achieve this vision? How should practitioners and policymakers engage with academia to make this vision work for the public good?

Roundtable
Can Metropolitan Areas Achieve Local and Global Sustainable Development Targets? A Focus on Urban Infrastructure & Food Systems (SUMD)
Location: ITAM, Building 3, Room 206
Moderator: Samuel Tabory, University of Minnesota
Speakers: Anu Ramaswami, University of Minnesota; Jorge Macías, World Resources Institute Mexico; Guillermo Velasco Rodríguez, Capital Sustentable

Description:
We are living in an urban planet where urban and global sustainability are deeply inter-twined. Actions within metropolitan areas have impacts on people and the environment both within and well outside urban administrative boundaries. However, many cities focus on sustainability outcomes largely within their administrative boundaries. This panel posits that focusing on urban infrastructure and food systems enables metropolitan areas to address a majority of the UN’s sustainable development goals (SDGs) both from a metropolitan area perspective and in terms of global targets. The session will discuss, from a practitioner perspective - How are US and international metropolitan areas responding to the SDGs, and how are they reporting on the various targets? Form a research perspective – Why do these few sectors play such a large role in shaping progress toward the SDGs? What is the status of the science on enabling metropolitan areas to identify SDG co-benefits and trade-offs across urban boundaries? From a policy perspective – whose role should it be to gather and report on progress toward SDGs at different levels?

Preparing the Engaged Practitioner: Strengthening Graduate Competencies to Enhance the Sustainability of Metropolitan Ecosystems (PPPI)

Location: ITAM, Building 3, Room 210

Moderator: Angela Evans, University of Texas, Austin

Speakers: Patricia A. Wilson, Jenny Knowles Morrison, Leon G. Staines, University of Texas, Austin; Mariana Morante Aguirre, Mexican Supreme Court FM4 Paso Libre

Description:

Increasingly complex global policy challenges driving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the New Urban Agenda (NUA) require the evolution of traditional policy and planning curriculums to produce a new breed of entrepreneurial policy catalysts. These catalysts must be able to facilitate four inter-related, participatory processes, including: 1) entrepreneurial explorations of complex ecosystems surrounding urban problems, 2) knowledge of human-centric design, 3) the ability to engage beneficiaries in end-user testing of proposed solutions, and 4) the building of inter-sectoral partnerships which can expand traditional policy networks to engage unexpected partners, advocates, and funders.

This roundtable brings together a dean, faculty, and social scientist practitioners to consider core competencies needed in these overlapping spheres, to meet sustainable development outcomes, as well as enhance urban sustainability. Nowhere is the challenge greater than in the mega-cities of the global South, where extreme poverty, dysfunctional bureaucracies, poor regulation, food security, migration, and exponential growth of informal settlements, to name but a few challenges, require expanding the bounds of traditional planning and policy formulation strategies to experiment with more participatory, cross-sectoral, and collaborative engagements.

This roundtable, composed of one dean driving curricular reform in the U.S.; two practitioner-social scientists (and graduates of U.S. public affairs schools); and two educators piloting an experimental classroom pedagogy, will consider the complex dilemmas inherent at the crossroads of planning and policymaking, academia and practice, and research and action. The roundtable will conclude by juxtaposing emergent insights against current policy education models, concluding with collective recommendations for future action.

Urban Resilience in Latin America: The Road from Theory to Practice (SUMD)

Location: ITAM, Building 5, Sala Maestros Upper

Moderator: Carlos Eduardo Martin, Urban Institute

Speakers: Arnoldo Matus Kramer, Mexico City; Jody Pollock, C-230 Consultores; Sara McTarnaghan, Urban Institute; Jessica Hernandez Ortiz, 100 Resilient Cities

Description:

Resilience to natural and man-made shocks poses a new conceptual challenge for communities, particularly when it involves accounting for existing social and economic stresses. The challenge of identifying and preparing for unknown future scenarios is a policy challenge for all levels of government, but particularly for cities with their tangible risks and present constituents—combined with their limited resources and, in some cases, fledgling institutions. The resilience rubber hits the proverbial road in cities.

Latin American cities are an especially appropriate context for discussing roadmaps to resilience given the region’s divergent efforts with innovative urban interventions yet persistent acute shocks and chronic inequality. To explore the institutional and practical barriers to urban resilience efforts, this roundtable brings together urban policy scholars, global urban intermediaries, and local government practitioners in Mexico City to discuss: 1) the external governance challenges for cities’ resilience-building within their nations; 2) the institutional and policy challenges within cities; and 3) efforts to intervene in both areas through global urban city resilience programs (like 100 Resilient Cities) and a local government’s Chief Resilience Officer.

Core questions to be asked of the roundtable participants will include: How is the resilience concept currently being mobilized in the Latin American urban context? How does this approach to resilience building in the region differ from past efforts to understand and manage metropolitan risk? And, how can policy research and evaluation be mobilized as a tool to understand how resilience principles are institutionalized within city government planning and operations?

La Quebradora Hydric Park - A Step Toward a Water Sensitive City? (ENV)
Location: ITAM, Building 3, Room 211
Moderator: Peter M. Ward, University of Texas, Austin
Speakers: Maria-Elena Giner, Regina M. Buono, University of Texas, Austin; Loreta Castro-Reguera, Manuel Perló-Cohen, UNAM
Description:
Over the past 400 years Mexico City has suffered one of the world’s most drastic landscape transformations as the original basin holding a 1100 km² lake system has been overtaken by the dense urban grid, where water occupies less than 50 km². This situation has become the cause of four major water related issues affecting the city’s dynamics: Lack of drinking water, urban flooding, ground subsidence, and reduced aquifer recharge. Parque Hídrico Quebradora introduces a contemporary waterscape that seeks to reconfigure the hydraulic system by capturing an intense runoff into an infiltration basin, thereby reducing urban flooding. In addition the venue treats a given volume of wastewater through a joint water treatment plant and wetland system. Parque Hídrico Quebradora introduces a contemporary waterscape, one of a kind in Mexico City, that aims to begin the reconfiguration of its hydraulic system by capturing an intense runoff, and drawing it into an infiltration basin, and therefore, reducing urban floods in the area. In addition the venue treats a given volume of wastewater through a joint water treatment plant and wetland system. La Quebradora directly impacts 28,000 inhabitants that lack recreational areas and regular access to water. This project won first place in the Latin American region LafargeHolcim Sustainable Architecture Prize in 2017 and recently also took overall Global Prize: https://www.lafargeholcim-foundation.org/awards/5th-cycle.
